

MANHATTAN HOUSE.
No. 69 DUANE-STREET, NEW YORK.
JAMES RYAN, from the Howard House, Boston, respectfully informs the public, that he has taken the large building in Duane street, 6 doors from Broadway, known as Rutgers' College, for the purpose of a Hotel and Restaurant. The interior of the building has been entirely taken out, and refitted expressly to suit the business of the present occupant.
Mr Ryan will keep the Manhattan House for the accommodation of Clubs and Parties. The best wines and liquors will be furnished from his cellar, having been carefully selected from the best stocks in Boston, a large portion of them being of the celebrated stocks long in the cellar of Mr Gallagher, late of the Exchange Coffee House. Rooms will be furnished for References and Courts Martial. Transient and permanent boarders will be accommodated in the best style known in the country and elegant apartments will be let, with or without board.
The Table d'Hôte will be supplied with every delicacy of the various seasons. Breakfasts, Dinners and Suppers, of every description, will be served at short notice, and various soups will be ready every day from eleven to three. Mr Ryan is confident that in this department, his own experience, added to the skill of the persons employed as waiters, will enable him to please the most fastidious epicures, both in respect to quality and style.
Those friends who have known the character of Mr Ryan's House in Boston, he is assured, will find his accommodations better, his means more ample, and his diligence quite as untiring; and from such strangers in this city, as love excellence in the various departments of his profession, he would be in the favor of an early call, with the full hope of giving satisfaction.

MARLBORO' HOTEL.
The subscriber would respectfully give notice that he has taken the MARLBORO' HOTEL, and is now ready to receive his friends. The house has been thoroughly repaired, enlarged, and neatly painted and papered. The furniture and bedding are new, and the accommodations in every respect are believed to be equal to any other Hotel in the city. No pains will be spared to furnish the Hotel with every variety of the market affords. Efforts will be made to furnish the table with the products of free labor, and provision will also be made for those who prefer vegetable diet. Religious worship will be maintained every day, and as far as possible to present, on company, be received or bills will be settled on the Sabbath. No smoking allowed. The Hotel will be kept entirely on the Temperance principle, and while not a particle of intoxicating liquor will be sold or used, it will be a quiet home for gentlemen travelling with their families, as well as for others. There are several suits of rooms for the accommodation of small families as permanent boarders. Application for permanent board will be received at the Hotel every day.

CROWN GLASS.—The New England Crown Glass Company invite the attention of the public to their manufacture of Window Glass. They have taken the chambers over the store of Messrs Sumner & Hopkins, in School street, and are now opening an entire assortment of their glass for wholesale or retail.
The better to adapt their Glass to general use, they now divide it into 4 sections, viz: No. 1, Cambridge 1 and 2, and No. 2, E. No. 1 is composed principally of what was formerly termed 1st quality. The Cambridge No. 1 corresponds to No. 2 quality and is altogether superior to the best of the German and other Cylinder Glass. Cambridge No. 2 is a good merchantable article for factories, stores, out houses, sky-lights, green houses, and buildings of the less expensive kind, and is cheaper by weight than the common Glass. The 7 by 9, and 8 by 10 come at 4 and 5 cents per light, by the box. The extra is a small portion selected for front parlor windows—and from the greater purity of its color, and durability of its lustre, it will cost the customer a preference at the same price, over the Dutch plate Glass.
By this certificate the purchaser may, by selecting the different qualities appropriate to the various parts of his building, obtain the glass at a great reduction from its former price, and it also supercedes the necessity for using the German Cylinder Glass, which disfigures so many of our otherwise handsome buildings.
There is no difference in the several selections in the color, thickness, and transparency of the Glass, nor in its external finish, and the Cambridge No. 1, therefore, is as appropriate for the higher stories of the best buildings, as the extra for the priors.
The impression has heretofore been general that Crown Glass was too costly except for buildings of an expensive character, but by a reference to their price current, it will be found that the cost of the New England Crown Glass over the best of the German and other Cylinder Glass, when judiciously selected, will not exceed half to one per cent. on the cost of the building, according as it may stand alone or in the block—and there is no other manner in which an expenditure of five times the amount will add so much to the cost of the building, as by being of double thickness, is capable of withstanding violent winds, hail storms, severe rains, and cracking from contraction in cold weather—its thickness also, will make the rooms warmer by more effectively excluding the cold air in the end is more economical independent of its greater beauty.
The Company have now on hand 2 to 10,000 boxes of the different sizes and selections, all of which has been opened and re-assorted with great care, and for all ordinary sizes an order can be executed within a week from its receipt.
The Company have on hand, a few hundred boxes of various sizes of imperfect color, suitable for grinding and backs of buildings, which will be sold at a reduced price.
Gentlemen building, are requested to call and examine this beautiful article for themselves, before they make their contracts. By seeing an assortment of the various qualities they will be able to judge understandingly the kind adapted to their wants.
The office hours of the Agent in Boston are from 11 till 2, but in his absence Messrs SUMNER & HOPKINS are authorized to make sales.
J. S. HASTINGS, Agent.

POETRY.

From the Russellville, Ky., Advertiser.
ANSWER
To "Lines by Charlotte Cushman," from the New York Knickerbocker for January.

We are indeed the things we seem to be,
Of earth, and from its iron influence free;
For we are they, or halt, or lame, or dumb,
"On whom the ends of this vain world are come."
We have outlived the day-dreams of the mind—
Those flattering phantasms, which so many bind,
All men-made creeds (your "faith's sustaining lever")
We have forsaken, and have left forever!

To plainly tell the truth, we do not run
The sober, gently course that we pursue;
But 'tis not we, who live the drossy lives,
But those who have their husbands or their wives!
But if by dross you mean they're lazy men,
Charlotte Cushman, take it back again;
For one with half an eye, or half a mind,
Can there see industry and wealth combin'd.

Your visit must have been exceeding short,
Or else your brain is of the shallow sort.
If camps and councils—soldiers, "fields of fame,"
Or yet, a people's praise or people's blame,
Is all that gives the gaze or bard his name,
We can "forego the strife, nor own our shame."

What great temptations you hold up to view
For men of sense or reason to pursue!
The praise of mortals—what can it avail,
When all their boasted language has to fail?
"And sorrow has not scored with demon hand,
Nor o'er our hopes pass'd Treachery's burning brand;"
I think you easily have made appear
In "bold scenes," in "banquets and in bowers!"
Mid revelry and variegated flowers.

Is where your mother Eve first felt their powers.
The "bridal scene," you say, we'd "grace right well!"
"Lang syne" there our first parents blindly fell!
The "bridal scene!" Is this your end or aim?
And can you thus pursue, "nor own your shame?"
If so, weak, pithy, superficial thing,
Drink, silent drink, the sick Hymeneal spring.

The bridal scene! the banquet or the bowers,
Or "woman's bed of thorns," or "path of flowers,"
Can't all persuade our souls to turn aside
To live in filthy lust or cruel pride.
Alas! Your path of flowers will disappear,
Even now a thousand thorns are pointing near;
Ah, here you find base "treachery's burning brand,"
And sorrows sear the heart, nor spare the hand.
But here "Beauty's sovereign," so my son,
A thing that in one hour may lose its hue,
It lies upon the surface of the sea!

Aye, Beauty's self was ever with a pin;
But still it suits the superficial mind—
The slight observer of the human kind;
The airy, fleet, vain, and hollow thing,
That only feeds on vanity and flattery.

"Man owns its powers?"—and what will man not own
To gain his end, to captivate, to dethrone?
The truth is this, whatever he may feign,
You'll find your greatest loss his greatest gain;
For like the bee he will improve the hour,
And all day long he'll buzz from flow'r to flow'r,
And when he saps the sweetness all away,
For aught he cares the flowers say all decay.

But here each other virtues we partake,
Where men and women all those ills forsake;
True virtue spreads her bright Angelic wing,
While saints and seraphs praise the Almighty King.
And when the matter's rightly understood,
You'll find we labor for each other's good;
And this, Charlotte Cushman, is our aim,
"Can you forego this strife, nor own your shame?"

Now if you would receive a modest hint,
You'd keep your name at least from public print,
Nor have it hoisted, handled round and round,
And echoed o'er the earth from mound to mound,
As the great advocate of (O, the name!)
Now can you think of this, nor "own your shame?"
But Charlotte, learn to take a deeper view
Of what your neighbors say, or neighbors do;
And when some flattering knaves around you tread,
Just think of what a SHAKER GIRL has said.

MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF ORLEANS.

Fontainebleau, May 29.—From the very first hour of the morning the whole population, from the royal guests and authorities of the town, down to the lowest of the people, were in movement, in expectation of the arrival of the Princess Helena, and of her reception at the chateau.
The principal street on her way to Melon, by which the bride of the Prince royal was to enter, was hung with tricolor flags, and filled with a busy and curious population. At 2 o'clock several carriages left the chateau at a rapid rate, containing the Dukes of Orleans and Nemours, and the gentlemen and ladies attached to the future household of the princess, who were to be presented to her at Melon. Anxious and curious were depicted on every countenance. So many reports had been spread around relative to the general appearance of the future Duchess of Orleans, the majority of which were decidedly unfavorable to her beauty, from the chateau to the barriere, all was equally curious to satisfy themselves on the point of her personal appearance.
At three o'clock, the grand court of the chateau, the Cour du Cheval Blanc, so famous in history as the scene of Napoleon's adieu to his troops, was lined with the battalions of infantry and artillery which were encamped within the town, the national guards of Fontainebleau and its environs, and the regiment of hussars quartered in the town. The chateau, which consists rather of a collection of several chateaux than one single building and which has been characteristically termed a rendez-vous of palaces, has several entrances. This grand court, however, is considered the principal entrance, and it was there that the reception of the bride of the prince royal was to become a minor event in the history of this palace, already so rich in historical souvenirs. This collection of buildings, which contain traces of so many sovereigns of France up to the present time, dates as far back as Louis VII.—Since that time, different parts of the building form a chain of historical associations connected with almost every reign. Henry IV., Louis VIII., Louis XIV., Louis XV., and Napoleon have each left a link to this chain, in the additions and reparations which were made under their sway to this their favorite residence, and Louis Philip has harmonized the whole in the tasteful arrangement of the successive suite of buildings each bearing the impress of their epoch, restored perfectly in the taste of the times in which they were first constructed, even to the most minute details.

The great court, generally called the Cour de Cheval Blanc, from a statue which has now disappeared, was crowded on this occasion with the troops placed to salute the bride on her arrival. At the upper end a double staircase, in the form of a horse-shoe, conducts to a small terrace, upon which the grand apartments destined for state occasions, and newly decorated with exquisite taste and great magnificence by Louis Philip, open. Upon this spot the royal family were to await the new addition to their circle—the new princess of their dynasty.
This terrace was crowded with officers belonging to the household, and various persons attached to the court; and from time to time the appearance of the King from the grand reception room, where the royal family was assembled, evinced his impatience to greet his future daughter-in-law. The square in front of the chateau was filled with expectant crowds of people; the windows of the houses opposite were crowded with strangers, whose curiosity had collected to witness the ceremony; and the bustle and animation of the multitude contrasted singularly with one single house opposite the windows of which were closed and the garden empty. In this house resides the Count de Polignac, brother to the unfortunate minister, and formerly governor of the chateau of Fontainebleau, whose amiable manners and general worth had endeared him to the inhabitants of the town, and all the country round, that when the revolution of July broke out, all, with one accord, called upon him to remain among them. At this house there were naturally none to greet the princess destined to prolong a dynasty, the establishment of which had ruined their fortunes, and plunged their family into grief for so many long years. At a five o'clock the Dukes of Orleans and Nemours, with their accompanying suites, returned from Melon, where they had met the princess, and carriages containing domestics in the Mackleburgh livery followed. Courier after courier arrived, but each brought tidings that the princess was still far off, and would probably arrive late.

The day, which had been remarkably fine, grew overcast; a storm was coming up in the distance; the rain began to fall, and all people began to murmur at the evil augury of the arrival of the princess in the midst of the thunder storm. "I would submit cheerfully to get wet, if it were but to arrive in bad weather," remarked a legitimist lady near us, whose curiosity had overcome her principles so far as to induce her to witness the princess's reception, but whose zeal was still strong enough to sacrifice a bonnet in the cause. Louis Philip's star, however, prevailed; and, after a few drops of moisture, which only served to alarm the ladies present and the national guards drawn out, the clouds passed over, the sun again shone out, and the evil prognostic passed away. It was near seven o'clock when, after several couriers, an officer advanced upon the court of the chateau, at full gallop, to announce the arrival of the princess at the gates of the town. She was there received by the authorities—the prefect of the department, the sous-prefect, and the mayor, the latter of whom delivered the customary address upon the occasion. The answer was made by the princess with ease, grace, and self-possession; a deputation of twenty young ladies in white delivered an address in verse, and a shower of bouquets, and the procession moved on. The shouts of the crowd announced the approach of the bride to the chateau; detachment of gendarmes on horseback preceded and followed the royal carriages, which had been sent to Melon to convey the princess with the Dowager Duchess of Mecklenburg to Fontainebleau. In the first of the princess with her stepmother and the Duke de Broglie, who had proceeded to the frontiers of France to meet her, and in the second the persons of the suite.

As the carriage entered the great gate of the court, the terrace at the head of the double staircase of the facade presented an interesting tableau. The King, the Queen, all the royal family, the royal household, the ministers of state, and great personages invited, were all assembled; and as the carriage advanced, and the princess and princesses, accompanied by the future household of the Princess Helena, and their suite, descended the right side of the horse-shoe staircase, and the rest of the assembled group the other, the coup d'oeil was extremely interesting.—Louis Philip and the Queen alone remained with a few attendants at the top of the staircase. On descending from the carriage, the Duke de Nemours offered his hand to the fair bride, the Duke of Orleans to the Duchess of Mecklenburg, and ascended again the staircase to present her to the King. On her arriving at the top, the King, as she stopped to kiss his hand, according to etiquette, opened his arms in evident emotion, and embraced her with tears in his eyes. On turning to the Queen, the princess stopped to kiss her Majesty
